DS&T does NOT generally review:

- space exploration and satellite development/O&M (refer to NRO; they review for both OD&E and NRO equities, except for OD&E personnel or other administrative information)
- intelligence analysis of foreign capabilities (including OSI and FMSAC activities – refer to DI)
- open source (refer to DIR, although we still process FBIS legacy records)
- agency staff communications (refer to DS)
- imagery collection and analysis (including records of the former NPIC/OIA – refer to the DI and/or NGA)
- post-1974 U-2 missions (refer to USAF).

The accredited security level of this system is: TOP SECRET//SI

Finished intelligence products produced by the CIA which incorporate information from source "collectors" are likely to be DI products. The names and forms of specific DI products have changed throughout the years. Many (but not all) of these products will have the name of the producing DI office on the cover.

Generally speaking, the DI does not produce finished intelligence about "operations" but rather the DI will produce analytic products from information collected by specific operations.

Some specific DI products include:

- Presidents Intelligence Checklist
- Presidents Daily Brief (PDB)
- Current Intelligence Bulletin (CIB)
- National Intelligence Daily (NID)
- Senior Executive Intelligence Brief (SEIB) and the World Intelligence Review (WIRe).

In addition to these daily products, the DI produces a variety of research papers, intelligence reports and memoranda on a wide variety of regional and functional topics.

Biographies of world leaders are a very sensitive equity belonging to the DI unless the specific bio clearly indicates that it was produced by another agency.

Non-operational intelligence information provided to the National Security Council in documents coordinated from Presidential libraries often contain DI intelligence equities.
